Carte Noire IFI French Film Festival

Mathieu Amalric, Bruno Dumont, Pascale Ferran, Benoit Jacquot, the Larrieu brothers; their films are defined by audacious stories, atypical formal characteristics, rigorous direction and vibrant performances, and by their filiation with previous cinema generations.

Cinema is a mental journey; ruptured, full of movement, displacement and discontinuity. Films bring about self-realisation and self-examination, depicting characters under pressure and the vitality of life.

In this year's Festival, now in its 15th year, we see fresh perspectives and formal freedom; work which flirts with genres and cinema's past (40-Love; Les Combattants; Eastern Boys; Eat Your Bones; Fool Circle; Girlhood; Tonnerre); the remarkable and powerful School of Babel and Timbuktu; The Kidnapping of Michel Houellebecq, and Li'l Quinquin originally created for TV but obviously with their home in the cinema; comedies, but not in a conventional sense (Elle l'adore; If You Don't, I Will; Paris Follies; The Yellow Eyes of the Crocodiles).

Detours to the Nouvelle Vague: the wonderful contribution of Antoine de Baecque; two Godards! Two or Three

Things I Know About Her (1967) and his latest, Goodbye to Language (3D); the screening of masterwork Hiroshima mon amour in tribute to Alain Resnais and the Marguerite Duras centenary.

We sincerely thank all our guests for travelling here to show their work and we hope you'll get to share time with them along the way.

The Festival is made possible with the enduring support of the Embassy of France in Ireland and I extend my gratitude to the French Ambassador in Ireland and his team. We thank all our sponsors, supporters and partners: the Institut Français and Unifrance Films, and the IFI's principal funder, the Arts Council. And finally the Festival's title sponsor, Carte Noire.

Bon Festival!

Girlhood

(Bande de filles)

Gala Opening

Wednesday 19th November, 20.00

Director: Céline Sciamma

112 minutes // France // 2014

Directors' Fortnight Selection,
Cannes International Film Festival 2014

With Water Lilies and Tomboy, Céline Sciamma established herself as an intriguing and committed filmmaker, presenting stories about young women in a distinctive style that is observational, unobtrusive and refreshingly sincere. Girlhood is a potent coming-of-age story measured out in chapters, focusing on a quartet of black girls living in the tower blocks of Paris. At the centre of the film is Marieme (a captivating, evolving performance from Karidja Touré), who has troubles at home, limited job prospects and is intimidated by the boys in her neighbourhood. This all changes when she is drawn to an uncompromising, wilful teenage girl gang who eventually take her seriously. (MH)

The screening will be followed by a reception.

Director's Note: The rise of female identity and desire are told through precise direction and sumptuous imagery.

Les Combattants

It's summer and Arnaud begins work for the family business, building garden sheds with his brother. Meeting under unusual circumstances, he becomes fascinated with the surly Madeleine. Obsessed by survival and gripped by prophecies of doom, Madeleine determines to join an elite commando unit. Arnaud follows. As they begin at an army training camp, their bodies and emotions are put to the test. Cailley, part of a new scene in French cinema alongside Sciamma (Tomboy, Girlhood) and Zlotowski (Grand Central) brings us an improbable mix of teen-movie, rom-com, and pre-apocalypse film, stretching the limits of each genre. (MPR)

Director's Note: A manifesto of love, with radiant performances, Madeleine (Adèle Haenel) and Arnaud (Kévin Azaïs) are as much 'clenched fists' as 'balls of emotion'.

The Blue Room (La Chambre bleue)

Julien (Mathieu Amalric) and Esther (Stéphanie Cléau), both married to other people, indulge in an illicit sexual tryst. The affair leads to Julien being arrested and interrogated by the police, questioned for motives and alibis. But what has he been accused of? A clever, knowing noir, The Blue Room is an adaptation of a Georges Simenon novel, co-scripted by Amalric and Cléau. Amalric's direction is sparing and unfussy, as is his performance, while Grégoire Hetzel's striking score contributes to this assured elegant film. (MH)

Director and actor Mathieu Amalric will participate in a post-screening Q&A on Friday 21st November.

Director's Note: A stunning adaptation, concise and intense with highly stylised acting and imagery.

IFI French Film Club screening on November 24th with Alliance Française. See schedule (p 4).

If You Don't, I Will

(Arrête ou je continue)

Amidst a schedule of art openings, sessions with their personal trainer, social events and hiking, middle-aged couple Pomme and Pierre spend their time bickering. During one of their woodland walks an argument erupts: Pomme, tired of always trying to patch things up, snatches Pierre's rain-coat, fleece and backpack and flees into the forest to spend the night. Not knowing what to do, Pierre goes home... Through the colourful pairing of Devos and Amalric, writer-director Fillières blends slapstick and farce with agile and inventive dialogue in this tragic-comic tale. (MPR)

Actor Mathieu Amalric will participate in a post-screening Q&A.

Director's Note: Devos, a regular collaborator with Sophie Fillières, is exquisite as Pomme, alongside Amalric's Pierre – impenetrable, unbending and yet somehow charming.

Bird People

People commute in a transitory world – a no man's land of anonymity. The crowd as an ant hill of activity, a microcosm. Student Audrey (an angelic Anaïs Demoustier) works part-time as a chambermaid in the Hilton at Roissy airport where she encounters Gary (Josh Charles), an American businessman. Two solitary existences collide. A film in two chapters, Pascale Ferran radically shifts the tone between social realism and fantasy tale. Ferran is influenced by Peter Pan, 'a wonderful story on the freedom of the imaginary and the temptation to jump into the void', and by Bong Joon-Ho's The Host, in which realism and the imaginary combine. (MPR)

Director Pascale Ferran will participate in a post-screening Q&A.

Director's Note: A magnificently poetic work on connection and isolation, Bird People is both spectacular and experimental, totally in sync with the times.

Love is the Perfect Crime

(L'Amour est un crime parfait)

Marc, a professor of literature, is known as a serial seducer. He lives in a mountain chalet with his hyper-stylish sister Marianne (Karin Viard). A few days after the disappearance of Barbara, his most brilliant student and latest conquest, Anna (Maiwenn) appears hoping to find her daughter. In Amalric's brilliant portrayal of the conflicted Marc we begin to question his innocence. The snow-covered landscapes and the university building (the Rolex, Lausanne) with its numerous large apertures and slopes, serve as metaphores for Marc's mind and apparent memory loss. (MPR)

Actor Mathieu Amalric will participate in a post-screening Q&A.

Director's Note: Mathieu Amalric reunites with the Larrieu brothers (To Paint or Make Love) in this disquieting 'comedy-love-thriller'.

Goodbye to Language (3D)

(Adieu au langage)

Jean-Luc Godard continues to do what he's done for his entire career, fearlessly exploring the possibilities of cinema, while consistently provoking audiences, demanding a response. Here, he presents a girl, a gun and a dog, and while there is musing on language, politics and image, Godard is a director who has always blurred his medium with his message, so debate about what Goodbye to Language is about, or if it means anything, should be expected and encouraged. What is undeniable is that it looks extraordinary; Godard's experiment in 3D is striking, lively, playful and unique, and he evidently remains a restless filmmaker with little respect for boundaries. (MH)

This screening will be introduced by artist Gerard Byrne.

Director's Note: This is an optical treasure – the film was shot and can only be truly experienced in 3D.

Diplomacy (Diplomatie)

Based on Cyril Gély's play, this fictitious encounter compresses the extraordinary yet true circumstances of late 1944. Under Hitler's orders, if Paris should fall to enemy hands then 'only as a field of rubble' General von Choltitz (Niels Arestrup) has mines planted and ready to detonate at the Eiffel Tower, the Louvre, Notre-Dame and on the bridges over the Seine. On the night of 24th August, Swedish Consul General Nordling (André Dussollier) climbs the secret stairs to von Choltitz's suite in the Meurice hotel. Summoning all his diplomatic skill he must persuade von Choltitz not to carry out his orders. (MPR)

---

Director's Note: Through a wonderful actors' duel, Schlöndorff keeps up the suspense until the final scene, even if we all know how it ends.

Eastern Boys

Gare du Nord train station in Paris, middle-aged Daniel (superbly played by Olivier Rabourdin [Of Gods and Men]), approaches Marek (Kirill Emelyanov), a male prostitute from Eastern Europe. They stare at each other and fix a price. Daniel makes an appointment for the next day at his home and thus begins an incongruous love story where raw physical encounter slowly turns into affection. Skillfully Campillo tackles head-on the subject of undocumented migrants through the unpredictable evolution of his characters. (MPR)

Director's Note: Robin Campillo, known as editor and co-writer (Human Resources, Time Out and Palme d'Or winner The Class), brings us this complex and distinctive film.

Director: Robin Campillo
128 minutes // France // 2014

School of Babel (La Cour de Babel)

This fascinating documentary on an adaptation class within a Parisian school is extremely timely, given current discussions about living in exile, direct provision and emigration. Documentary and feature filmmaker Bertucelli (Since Otar Left) brings great sensitivity to her depiction of these young people aged 11-15, from Ireland, Senegal, Morocco, China, and all brand new to Paris. With very varied backgrounds, they are motivated by a desire to learn French to try and fit in. We follow their early attempts to grasp the language while at the same time learn a little about their hopes and dreams of a safe future within this culturally diverse society. (AM)

---

Director's Note: An unobtrusively filmed portrait – these engaging and fragile youths are filled with hopes and doubts while facing incertitude.

89 minutes // France // 2014

The Kidnapping of Michel Houellebecq

(L'Enlèvement de Michel Houellebecq)

Purporting to be the account of a real life incident when the controversial author went AWOL on a book tour, The Kidnapping of Michel Houellebecq features Michel Houellebecq playing Michel Houellebecq, who is taken captive in a clumsy kidnapping and ultimately gives his captors more grief than he's worth. Guillaume Nicloux's film is a droll, inventive and unconventional caper, with its subject a surprisingly engaging presence at the centre of it. Houellebecq's performance seems too natural to be anything of the sort, and his sly, self-parodic turn illustrates that he is an artist with a sense of humour that is frequently overlooked. (MH)

---

Director's Note: Fantastic, hilarious, comic, mundane and absurd, between documentary and fiction – how can we know what is real?

Elle l'adore

Muriel Bayen (Sandrine Kiberlain), a beautician and divorced mother, leads an orderly daily life and an active fantasy life. For 20 years she has been the number one fan of pop singer Vincent Lacroix (Laurent Lafitte). One night, Vincent's life is struck by drama, and Muriel is the only one who can help him. This is a turning point in Muriel's life, dragged into a story she would never even have imagined. The pairing of Kiberlain and Lafitte is captivating; Muriel is both comic and tragic; Vincent filled with the torments and anxieties of being a pop star. (MPR)

Director's Note: Director Jeanne Herry (daughter of French superstars, pop singer Julien Clerc and actress Miou-miou) knows her subject, perfectly juggling dark comedy and sophisticated thriller.

Paris Follies (La Ritournelle)

Following 2010's Copacabana, Marc Fitoussi works again with Isabelle Huppert (Brigitte) who with husband Xavier (a wonderful Jean-Pierre Darroussin), farms beef in Normandy. After encountering handsome young Parisian Stan (Pio Marmai) at a neighbour's party, Brigitte heads to Paris on the pretext of an appointment with a dermatologist after an eczema flare. Searching challenge and revival, her Paris escape becomes a sort of matrimonial all-or-nothing, where Brigitte enjoys everything on offer. With dense, warm photography by DOP Agnès Godard, Fitoussi eliminates stereotypes about the rural world (often depicted as dark and depressing) to control this comedy with flair and tremendous precision. (MPR)

---

Director's Note: In an unexpected casting, Isabelle Huppert is refreshing and touching in this tender comedy about a middle-aged couple in crisis.

3 Hearts (3 Coeurs)

Marc (Benoît Poelvoorde), a tax inspector travelling in provincial France, misses his train back to Paris. He asks Sylvie (Charlotte Gainsbourg) whom he meets in a café, to recommend a hotel. Striking up a conversation, they take a night-long stroll. They arrange to meet in Paris a few days later and while Sylvie keeps the date, Marc becomes ill and cannot make it... It is in part the predictability of the storyline that makes this film so enjoyable. Familiar tropes of melodrama (lyrical music, fade-outs and voice-over to comment on the characters' sentimental ups and downs) allow us to revel in the superb performances of the cast. (MPR)

Director's Note: This enthralling melodrama from Benoit Jacquot (Farewell, My Queen) brings together the wonderful cast of Benoît Poelvoorde, Charlotte Gainsbourg, Chiara Mastroianni and Catherine Deneuve.

Timbuktu

Timbuktu is overtaken by jihadists, who are heavily armed and emboldened with indignant righteousness. They insist women cover up visible flesh, and clamp down by banning music, smoking, football and laughter, while improvised courts mete out extreme sentences. In the dunes on the edge of town, a shepherd lives undisturbed with his wife and daughter, though his tranquillity is soon shaken. A brilliant and significant work from master African filmmaker Abderrahmane Sissako, this depiction of a region in the grip of religious fundamentalism manages to be both chilling and alluring, making pertinent political points about the world today in an elegant, engrossing style. (MH)

---

Director's Note: Politically charged, this is a film of rare force. Sissako's magnificent pictorial sense is mesmerising.

Friday 28th November, 18.15
Director: Benoit Jacquot
106 minutes // France // 2014
Official Competition,

Li'l Quinquin (P'tit Quinquin)

Small-town life near Calais is disrupted when a chopped-up body is discovered inside a dead cow in a desolate WWII bunker. Inspector Van der Weyden, riddled with nervous ticks, and his sluggish, philosophical assistant Carpenter investigate, while a band of scoundrels led by 'teenage dirtbag' Li'l Quinquin spy on the police, their foolish pranks becoming the main concern of the story... All the elements of Dumont's previous work are here – a bleak vision of society; themes of good and evil; the choice of non-professional actors – yet to this, Dumont brings his desire to make 'a parody of CSI... a "tragi-comedy"' corresponding with the duality of the human condition.' (MPR)

Director's Note: Zany antics and distorted behaviour create an off-beat comedy with laugh-out-loud moments of hilarity.

The Yellow Eyes of the Crocodiles

(Les Yeux jaunes des crocodiles)

Forty-something, beautiful and rich, Iris lives an easy, empty Parisian life. Exploiting her kindly lawyer husband, she fills her days lunching or sweating in a luxurious spa with her female friends. Sister, Joséphine (Julie Depardieu), a brilliant but broke 12th century historian, lives with her two daughters. Her husband has deserted her to raise crocodiles in Africa. One evening at dinner, Iris, bored, announces that she is writing a novel. Caught in her lie, she persuades her sister to save her by writing the book. (MPR)

Director Cécile Telerman will participate in a post-screening Q&A.

Director's Note: Emmanuelle Béart brilliantly playing Iris – self-centered, scheming, unrepentant – somehow manages to both exasperate and move us.

Closing film

40-Love (Terre battue)

Jérôme (Olivier Gourmet) has just lost his job as senior executive in a chain store and is determined to start his own business despite the concerns of wife Laura (Valeria Bruni-Tedeschi). Their 11-year-old son Ugo, a promising tennis player, hopes to get accepted to the national training centre at Roland-Garros. With its genesis in a news story, this astutely observed film focuses on the father-son relationship. Counterpointing his son's journey, Jérôme's distress is existential, the world of tennis acting as a microcosm. Father and son are very close emotionally yet unable to really understand each other. Meanwhile off-camera the gaps between Jérôme and his wife are insidiously widening. (MPR)

---

Director's Note: Produced by the Dardenne brothers, 40-Love is an impressive debut of sparse, dry realism from director Stéphane Demoustier.

Since 2003, Jean-Charles Hue has filmed the Yeniche community. The Lord's Ride (2010) and Eat Your Bones chronicle the adventures of the Dorkel family, bringing together the same non-professional cast. Both films border fiction and documentary while vividly capturing the unique language and character of the Yeniche. (MPR)

Emerging Directors

Emerging with the latest wave of 'young French cinema' both Guillaume Brac and Vincent Mariette have already made a name for themselves with several accomplished short films. They belong to a generation in their 30s, both studied at LA FEMIS (the national French film school) and work with the same actor, Vincent Macaigne, hailed as 'the new Depardieu'. Their films are low budget, mixing genres and with references to auteur cinema, clearly aware of their place in a cinematic lineage. This dynamic group has a strong desire to tell stories, putting the individual at the centre, giving rise to complex emotional responses from often commonplace situations. (MPR)

Tonnerre

Thursday 20th November, 20.45

Director: Guillaume Brac

106 minutes // France // 2014

Locarno International Film Festival 2013

Maxime (Vincent Macaigne) returns to live with his father (Bernard Ménez) in Tonnerre (meaning 'thunder'), a small town in the Burgundy region. With the young and pretty Mélodie, a journalist at the regional newspaper, Maxime finds love when it is least expected. Amidst the apparent tranquility of Tonnerre, a passion is born giving way to obsession. Brac's work is inspired by post-New Wave cinema. In Tonnerre, we think of Rohmer (A Winter's Tale in particular) and of Jacques Rozier. Like an emotional stake, Vincent Macaigne's poignant, heart-wrenching performance goes right to the heart. (MPR)

Director's Note: The film's strength lies in its ability to slip – not in an obvious way – with gradually rising intensity, from simple chronicle to dark thriller.

Fool Circle (Tristesse club)

DOUBLE BILL PROGRAMME

Thursday 27th November, 18.15

Director: Vincent Mariette

90 minutes // France // 2014

'I'm calling you to bring you good news: dad is dead!' Léon (Laurent Lafitte) and Bruno (Vincent Macaigne), brothers diametrically opposed, never hung out, and saw even less of their dad, whose memory brings back a lost and confused childhood. At the funeral home, rather than their deceased father, they meet Chloé (Ludivine Sagnier), the sister they never knew they had. The trio start an investigation at their childhood home – a former lakeshore hotel, now officially sealed. Through an atmosphere of melancholy, a fine and subtle comedy emerges, stylised by cinephilic digressions referencing both Bertrand Blier and Wes Anderson. (MPR)

Director's Note: A film about crisis and reconstruction, each character exploring their personal anxieties and hopes on a circular trajectory.

The Lizards (Les Lézards)

(Les Lézards)

Director: Vincent Mariette

15 minutes // France // 2012

Léon joined by his buddy Bruno, waits in a sauna where he is to rendezvous a girl he has met online. (MPR)

Antoine de Baecque has selected and will introduce films by Godard, Truffaut and Rohmer, directors synonymous with the Nouvelle Vague and each of whom was a film critic at Les Cahiers du cinéma.

He also introduces the documentary Two in the Wave (2011), a vibrant examination of the relationship between Godard and Truffaut, which he wrote and was directed by Emmanuel Laurent. The Nouvelle Vague was unleashed at the 1959 Cannes Film Festival with François Truffaut's 400 Blows, a film which served as something of a manifesto. The revitalisation of filmmaking brought about by the Nouvelle Vague was inspired as much out of a love of cinema as that of literature.

Antoine de Baecque is a leading historian of post-war French cinema, a film critic, editor and a Professor of History and Cinema Studies at ENS and Nanterre University. His extensive writing on the French New Wave includes the essay La Nouvelle Vague, portrait d'une jeunesse (1998); a historical review La Cinéphilie: Naissance d'un regard, histoire d'une culture (2003); reference work Camera Historica: The Century in Cinema (2008); a two-volume history of Les Cahiers du cinéma, histoire d'une revue (1991); and three biographies: François Truffaut (1996, co-written with Serge Toubiana); Godard (2010); Eric Rohmer (2014, co-written with Noël Herpe). ## 'French New Wave and Cinephilia'

Saturday 22nd November, 12.00

We are delighted that Antoine de Baecque will share a one-hour conversation with Dr. Douglas Smith, Senior Lecturer, School of Languages and Literature, UCD. Free but ticketed.

The IFI would like to thank at MK2: Margot Rossi and Anne-Laure Barbarit; at l'Institut Français: Christine Houard.

Antoine de Baecque's notes translated by Gwen Billett.

Two in the Wave

(Deux de la vague)

Emmanuel Laurent, Antoine de Baecque

Friday 21st November, 20.30

90 minutes // France // 2011

Cannes Classic, Cannes Film Festival

Two in the Wave is the story of a true friendship that goes awry. Jean-Luc Godard and François Truffaut meet in 1950: they go to the same cinema clubs, write for the same magazines, the Cahiers du Cinéma and Arts. When Truffaut becomes a director with 400 Blows, which triumphs at Cannes in 1959, he helps Godard get into filmmaking, giving him his screenplay called Breathless. They are close during the '60s, but eventually politics comes between the two friends. In 1968 Godard becomes involved in the revolution, while Truffaut continues to pursue his career in the same kind of films. This friendship and consequent split creates an incarnate narrative of French cinema. (ADB)

Mississippi Mermaid

(La Sirène du Mississippi)

François Truffaut

Saturday 22nd November, 13.30

123 minutes // France // 1969

Even though it was a considerable public and critical disappointment when it came out in 1969, it is one of Truffaut's most beautiful films: secretive, intimate, vibrant, oscillating between the wild and civilised characteristics of its author. All begins well (the two most famous French actors of the time, Jean-Paul Belmondo and Catherine Deneuve, a romance-thriller plot, the exotic backdrop of Reunion Island...) but despite the idyllic setting trouble lies ahead. Belmondo is filmed as a virginal woman, but the romance turns sour, poisonous even; erotic fetishism takes centre stage, and Truffaut clearly falls in love with his actrice. (ADB)

Two or Three Things I Know About Her...

(Deux ou trois choses que je sais d'elle...)

Jean-Luc Godard

Sunday 23rd November, 16.30

90 minutes // France // 1967

This is possibly Godard's richest film, brimming with the various experiments that so fascinated him during the mid-'60s. This examination of suburban evolution focuses on the so-called 'shooting stars', part-time prostitutes that sold their bodies to supplement their income, a new phenomenon borne out of a crude capitalist consumer society. Godard creates a new form: the spoken film, or rather a murmured one, as he directs his actors, including Marina Vlady, distraught and magnificent; guiding them with his voice (whispered in an ear piece). He makes comments himself through voice-overs on the film he is creating, and also on his readings, his feelings and his ideas. (ADB)

Love in the Afternoon

(L'Amour l'après-midi)

Eric Rohmer

Saturday 29th November, 16.00

95 minutes // France // 1972

The last film in the Six Moral Tales is an opportunity for Rohmer to use the full powers of the imagination. Initially he develops the theme of the double life; can we love two people at once? As always the reply is ambiguous, ambivalent, but it is resolved in a crisis: a panicked man abandons his naked mistress and flees back to his marital home. However at the same time the man's imagination takes hold, and the narrator becomes an incorrigible dreamer... Rohmer films and juxtaposes the two states of being (and indeed of himself), the well-behaved and libertine parts of himself; never has he shown so much of himself on screen. (ADB)

Pascale Ferran has a singular artistic eye. Her fascinating, audacious, unpredictable cinema defies categorisation.

Ferran defends the notion of the 'films du milieu' – combining aesthetic exigency with popular appeal. Exploring themes of existence, emotion and inner reflection, her films are meditative, sensory experiences.

After studying at Paris III University and the IDHEC, Ferran worked in television and notably as a screenwriter for Arnaud Desplechin. Her impressive debut, Petits arrangements avec les morts (winner Caméra d'Or, 1994), was followed by L'Âge des possibles (1995). In 1999, she supervised the French dubbing of Eyes Wide Shut. Lady Chatterley (2006) received numerous awards while Bird People competed in Un Certain Regard at the Cannes Film Festival 2014. (MPR)

We are delighted and honoured that Pascale Ferran will be attending the Festival.

The IFI thanks Sanam Madjedi at Films Distribution.

Masterclass: 'Literary adaptation and visual effects'

Sunday 23rd November, 12.00

Pascale Ferran will be hosting a masterclass moderated by Dr. Brigitte Le Juez (DCU) and Dr. Patrick Brereton (DCU). Free but ticketed.

Lady Chatterley

Pascale Ferran

Sunday 23rd November, 14.00

158 minutes // France // 2006

Winner Prix Louis Delluc 2006

Winner of 5 César awards in France

Constance Chatterley's everyday life, in a fascinating portrayal by Marina Hands, is dull and comfortable – the clock chimes, mealtime, walks in the park... Her husband Sir Clifford, crippled in the Great War, suffers from sexual impotence.

The course of Constance's life is changed as she takes up an affair with the estate's gamekeeper, Parkin, a robust man of few words, who lives in a log cabin. Six fleshy sex scenes chart their journey from desire to intimacy, love to freedom. Based on the less notorious version of D.H. Lawrence's story, John Thomas and Lady Jane. (MPR)

Director Pascale Ferran will participate in a post-screening Q&A.

Director's Note: Ferran's achievement is in bringing rhythm to time, allowing us to experience the inner emotions and reflections of the characters, free of the world around them.

Minuscule: Valley of the Lost Ants (3D)

(Minuscule: La Vallée des fourmis perdues)

A summer's day. A peaceful clearing in the country. It's hard to imagine the frenetic battle that will ensue after a young couple run to shelter from a storm, leaving the remains of their picnic behind. Two tribes of ants enter the frame – one black, one red, both determined to win the abandoned box of sugar. Somehow, a red ladybird gets caught in the crossfire, and takes sides to protect the ant hill from destruction.

This dazzling 3D animation mixes CGI insects with real natural settings, quirky sound effects and humour to extraordinary effect. Based on the worldwide hit TV series by writer-directors Szabo and Girard, this is epic adventure on a minuscule scale. (AM)

Recommended age 6+

Alain Resnais Tribute and Marguerite Duras Centenary: Special Screening

Hiroshima mon amour

A film where the literary and the cinematic merge.
In 1958 when Alain Resnais, after Night and Fog, received a commission to make a documentary on Hiroshima, he chose to create a feature film instead, using documentary footage with a fictional dimension dominating the film. To assist him he asked a novelist who had poignantly explored human despair in her work, Marguerite Duras. They agreed that their film should convey the impossibility of ever knowing what happened in Hiroshima. Today their perspective still raises ethical questions: what do we perceive? how do we react to images of human suffering?

Duras once recalled that Resnais insisted she write a literary text for Hiroshima mon amour and forget the camera, which she achieved to the most stunning effect. For Eric Rohmer, together they had created the first modern film of sound cinema.

Introduced by Dr. Brigitte Le Juez, Senior Lecturer in Comparative Literature, School of Applied Language and Intercultural Studies, DCU and President of the Comparative Literature Associate of Ireland.
